

As a National Discipline Awardee, What Can I Do to Make This Country a Better Place to Live In?

By: Joshua Neri A. Cristobal

The person who deserves to be entitled as a national discipline awardee is the person who has works hard for it, embodies his ideals and morals as a Christian and performs his duties and responsibilities as a citizen of this country. He is an individual who consistently conforms to the standards set by his school and the church without compromising his values and integrity. Most importantly, he uses education as a springboard to contribute to the betterment of himself, his family and the society at large.

I believe being academically excellent can make all things possible. As a consistent honor student and an active member of different school organizations and the church help me develop my potentials and attitudes to be a person of substance reflected on how I live my life and serve my church and my school. Being blessed as one of the brightest students in Saint John Academy has given me a lot of privilege for it has become my stepping stone to achieve my goals in life. Reaching my goals is not an easy task for I have to juggle my academic and co-curricular activities. My values and positive attitude in life provide assistance in achieving balance between my study and my commitment to serve San Jose Parish as youth leader in religious activities. What I am doing now is a preparation for my future. If I can consistently execute my duties and commitments to the church, community and school, it would be my greatest contribution to the society. The future depends on what I do in the present. That is why I'm doing my best. This is my way of showing gratitude to my parents who work hard for my studies. Giving my parents good grades and setting good example to my fellow students and the youth where I serve are the best way of exemplifying that I am serving my nation in my own little but best way.
