

Social media has been believed to be the “perfect standard” of the society. Whatever these media provide is followed and supported by the people including the phenomenal occurrence of makeup transformation. Makeup transformation is the activity wherein individuals create resemblances of the facial features of renowned people who are celebrities, politicians, or even themselves using cosmetics. Consequently, a lot of people gave time and attention that resulted to it being considered as a cultural icon. But for something to be considered as a cultural icon, it must be shared or distributed and achieved mass appeal (Jefferson, 2015).

Starting from international celebrities such as Marilyn Monroe, the Kardashians and Jenners up to the local artists like Regine Velasquez and Pia Wurtzbach all of these people are iconic, influential, and empowered individuals. Previously, makeup transformation was no big deal until the time when celebrities began doing it.

As seen in the pictures, a Filipino celebrity portrayed the process of achieving the faces of Khloe Kardashian (above) and Dakota Johnson (below). This perfect depiction inspired Picture 6. Paolo Ballesteros imitating Khloe Kardashian.

Picture 7. Paolo Ballesteros imitating Dakota Johnson, actress other people to do the same. Furthermore, makeup transformation had set an avenue for makeup artists and other individual explore the art of cosmetics. This phenomenon helped the society understand the implications and power of makeup (Britton, 2012). Today, people embrace the enhancing power of cosmetics as part of their daily routine.

Makeup. Cosmetics at this point in time is considered as one of the most essential thing a lady must have. Before, wearing make ups are only for occasions and special celebrations, but now, even students put make up on (Kaplan, 2015). There are numerous reasons that elucidates why do both sexes use cosmetics. First, people use make up to enhance their looks and be presentable. Second, they use make up to look better and have more confidence. However, it entails the idea that people tend to be too dependent on makeups. This can result to the fact that those people can only be confident when they have make up on and when not they do not have enough strength to face other people with just their bare face.

Transformation. Moreover, makeup transformation is not only limited to doing a mimesis or mimicry of a particular individual. Hence, it does not follow certain rules for someone to be able to achieve it. Makeup transformation has a plethora of choices like the before-after transformation in a form of pictures or videos. As seen from the pictures (left side and below), certain individuals displayed first their original looks and then supported by their ideal looks. This is how makeup transformation works in a form of picture. However, for a video form of makeup transformation, it start from an ugly depiction and on the latter part it becomes a good-looking person. This occurrence have served the society a new context and object for humor and sarcasm

Picture 9. Jiezell Pascacio, before-after transformation

Picture 8. Paula Vergara, before-after transformation